The provincial government has introduced a series of ministerial orders under the Emergency Program Act to support its ongoing response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

- These orders do not override First Nations jurisdiction. Local states of emergency issued by First Nations for their communities continue to apply.
- First Nations usually declare states of emergency through band council resolutions or issuing a declaration. The Province continues to recognize First Nations' states of emergency, and to support First Nations in managing COVID-19 through agencies including Emergency Management BC and First Nations Health Authority.
- Some First Nations under their local states of emergency have issued travel restrictions related to non-essential travel into their communities, and the Province respects these emergency declarations.

Area is Patrolled by TRTFN

If you have questions about these restrictions, contact TRTFN Lands Department at 250-651-7900 or trtfn@gov.trtfn.com
